Hi. If there is something I hate more than self-praise, it is falling into cliché or hackneyed phrases. However, this does not mean that something ceases to be true, therefore, it is with some discomfort that if I had to choose a word to describe myself it would be "passionate". The passion and inclination to give my best covers every aspect of my life, from the simplest tasks, such as changing a light bulb or mounting a shelf, to the more complex such as programming. This passion is constantly fueled by the very nature of the discipline: there is always something new to learn and the work itself moves you to want to be better
